EDITORIAL AMBITION

Someone once defined life as a library book: it's yours to use and take care of, but it must be returned. Does it not seem logical that while we have this gift we should make the most of it? Ambition is one of the greatest things in life which can make one useful. Many of those who graduate this spring will be going into the world to fulfil ambitions which they have cherished and nurtured during their high school years and perhaps longer. Others who are undecided will be searching and experimenting, looking for their rightful place in the scheme of things.

Failure to fulfil one's ambition is due to fear, not fear of physical discomfort but fear of failure. The secret to overcoming this fear is to know your abilities and realize your limitations. Along with the hard work and preparation which are needed to fulfil ambition mistakes are made, but it is through our mistakes that we learn. After several of Edison's experiments had failed to produce results his colleague remarked that it was too bad all this work had been done for nothing. "But it is not for nothing," Edison replied. "Look: now we know of seven hundred things that won't work." And so it should be with us - failure in one field should only spur us on to success in another.

Perhaps as we go through life it would be wise to remember Shakespeare's quotation from his play "King Lear": "Nothing will come of nothing."

STUDENT COUNCIL

1. to r.: Pat Boulton, Karen Caskey, Mauro Cotechini (president), Janice McNickle, Margo Henderson.

To express the Student Council's gratitude for the student support and co-operation we received this year, I would have to write a book! This I cannot do, but I can extend our appreciation by a simple, warm "Thank you!"

This year our dances have been generally well attended, the various drives well supported, and a tremendous amount of school spirit was displayed at different occasions. I should like to thank Mr. Ferguson, Miss Koval, and Mr. Wilson, the staff representatives on the Student Council, for their guidance and support this year.

The editors and their assistants are to be congratulated for making this year's Conning Tower one of the finest yearbooks ever produced at Weston.

Finally I wish the students and staff of W.C.V.S. abundant luck and happiness in the near and distant future.

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

It is a pleasure for me to introduce our school magazine to its readers and to compliment the members of the editorial staff on the excellent quality and pleasing variety found in its pages.

Our school this year has an enrollment of 1558, which is two below last year's enrollment. Since the inception of the Reorganization Programme three years ago, the student population has shown a definite trend toward the Business and Commerce, and Science, Technology and Trades branches with a consequent reduction on the number of pupils enrolled in the Arts and Science branch. To take care of additional class units occasioned by the new programme, we now have six portable classrooms and are waiting expectantly for improved facilities in the Library, Physical Education, Occupational and Office accommodation.

At our recent commencement exercises, eight of our pupils were awarded Ontario Scholarships, and diplomas were presented to 294 pupils - 85 Honour Diplomas and 209 Secondary School Diplomas - which represents an all-time record for the school.

To the members of the staff, 75 in all, I would like to extend my sincere appreciation for a job of excellence and co-operation during the past year. For those pupils who may be leaving the school this year, I wish a real measure of satisfaction in your endeavours. I do hope that for those who are continuing their education within our walls, a diploma of success may crown your best efforts.

C.W. Christie,
Principal.

Students in schools throughout the land look forward to graduation with high hopes and with eager anticipation that entry into business and professional careers will lead to prosperous and happy lives. They recognize that future happiness is likely to result only if adequate educational foundations are laid.

Man's quest for happiness has persisted through the ages; its recipe modified by each generation. In to-day's rapidly changing society, with, seemingly, so many 'brands' of happiness, the choice of avenues leading to ultimate happiness is most perplexing.

It is legitimate to seek happiness, but those who seek it most selfishly and ardently, often fail to find it. Immediate pleasures, rest and relaxation are valuable elements of it, but their value is effective only if they are balanced against some form of worthy activity. One's greatest delight is the satisfaction which follows full honest effort and the attainment of goals to which one has assiduously inspired. One cannot buy a ticket to happiness nor win it without toil.

R.R. Heard

VICE-PRINCIPALS' MESSAGES

Each year students eagerly await the day when the Conning Tower is distributed throughout the school. Those who have worked so hard to produce this fine publication finally see the results of their year's efforts. Years from now those of you who keep these copies will refer to them and think back to your days at W.C.V.S., days full of school studies, friendships and extra-curricular activities.

Education has been defined as the process where-by a pupil who must be taught is transformed into a student who teaches himself. This is most likely to occur in the later years of high school. It must take place by the time you proceed to high learning, the time when you are on your own. You educate yourself or you fall by the wayside. We endeavour to guide you, but success or failure depends upon yourself.

AERIAL PHOTOGRAPHY FROM THE CFRB HELICOPTER

Ever since colour end sheets were first used last May in the Conning Tower, the editorial staff had been trying to think of something different for the end sheets of this year's edition. During the summer we secured permission from Radio Station CFRB to send a photographer on one of Eddie Luther's traffic report flights.

On Sept. 23, after photographing the Junior Football game, I drove to Windfields Farm in the east end of Toronto. At 5:00 p.m. we took off, and in a few minutes were circling Weston. Smithy made several passes, each time banking the helicopter steeply in order to get a good view.

For those interested in technical data, the picture used on the end sheets was taken on Ektachrome, at 1/500 and f 5.6.

The camera was a 4x5 Crown Grafic with a 135 mm. lens.

The air was exceptionally clear, but rough. Since there was a possibility that the picture might be blurred by the shaking of the helicopter, I got permission to go up on the morning of Oct. 13, when the light would be in a better direction. However the visibility was extremely poor, and I took no colour pictures.

CFRB has operated its aerial traffic report twice each weekday as well as during holiday weekends for the last five years. Such a helicopter costs about $108 per hour to run, and during a year CFRB traffic reporters log about 600 hours.

BONNE CHANCE

After eighteen years at Weston, Miss Hanlon left for a new position at Leaside High School.

At Weston Collegiate Miss Hanlon taught French and German but at Leaside she is teaching only French. To the students at Weston Miss Hanlon was much more than a language teacher: she was a person in whom many students confided, a teacher who could be severe when the occasion required but who revealed her sense of humour and understanding to all her classes.

The school showed its appreciation by presenting her W.C.V.S.'s highest award, the white "W".

Although active in the school, Miss Hanlon has always found time to visit her family in Guelph. It was in Guelph that she lived and went to school; however, she came to Toronto to attend university.

Miss Hanlon has also found time to pursue her hobbies. She revealed these interests by sharing her "extra bit of information" with her classes. In these brief discussions we learned of her interest in the theatre, literature and art. She also showed her love for the outdoor life.

Weston C.V.S. wishes Miss Hanlon the best of luck and happiness at Leaside.

REMEMBERING

FREDERIC R. BRANSCOMBE, C. D., M. A.

What is Remembrance Day to me? It has been different things to me at different times in my life. There is truth in what Tennyson has Ulysses say:

"I am a part of all that I have met:

Yet all experience is an arch where through
Gleams that untravelled world, whose margin
Fades for ever and for ever when I move."

Because you and I have travelled through different arches of experience in our lives, Remembrance Day cannot be exactly the same thing to you as it is to me. Similarly, because most of you have not yet travelled very far through your arches of experience, Remembrance Day is not yet what it will become for you in later years. But there are some elements of it to which I can point and say, "Here for you and for me is a part of the pattern of Remembrance Day."

First, I believe that Remembrance Day is a time for certain emotions. It is a time for remembering with gratitude and with pride. Surely it is fitting at this time that we say, half as a prayer and half as a promise, "At the going down of the sun, and in the morning, we will remember them."

Secondly, I believe that Remembrance Day is a time for thinking. For example, to go through the Memorial Service unthinkingly is to miss its message. It is not meant to be a service of gloom and fear, in which Death is the central figure. In normal military routine, the bugle call 'Last Post' literally refers to the last duties of the day. It promises a night's rest to the weary soldier. The second bugle call, 'Reveille,' is the ordinary call to start a new day's work. In a Memorial Service, the playing of 'Last Post' reminds us that the dead have gone to their well deserved rest, where no more fatigue or loneliness is, nor pain, nor fear. The period of silence which follows is easily identified with death. There would indeed be gloom in the Service if it ended here with the 'Last Post' and with death. But this is not so. The heavy silence is broken with the sparkling notes of 'Reveille' to remind us that the silence of death is temporary. It will be broken, at the last, by a great and final 'Reveille' that will summon the dead to God's final parade on a brighter day and in a better place beyond the grave. The sounding of 'Reveille' in a Memorial Service is a shout of joy. It changes the whole mood of the occasion. Remembrance Day is, indeed, a time for thinking.

Thirdly, Remembrance Day is a time for decision and for action. If (and I say "If" quite intentionally), if the students of today are spared the horror of another war, it will not be because the human race has suddenly become saintly (rather than selfish) or sensible (rather than stupid). It will not be because the progress of science has convinced mankind not to wage war any more. And it certainly will not be because you deserve a better fate than was given to those who came before you--unless you earn it for yourselves. But it could be because you have succeeded, where others had failed, in removing the causes of war. My high school classmates and I never gave a thought (much less a dollar!) to Korean orphans. On the other hand, you have! To that extent you have contributed not only to starving children, you have contributed to your own salvation. Dr. Leslie Weatherhead recently gave this advice to a group of young people, such as you: "Do not seek after the things that peace will bring to you -- but work for the things that will bring peace." Remembrance Day is a time to decide to do something about removing the causes of war.

Finally, Remembrance Day is a time for believing. It is a time for faith. It is an occasion for each individual to renew his belief in those values which, to him, are of the ultimate importance. Each person must find these and hold on to them for himself. But the need for them is universal: it is as modern as today and as ancient as the Psalms.

The experiences of my life, thus far, have shaped a view of Remembrance Day such as I have outlined to you. What sort of a view of Remembrance Day has been shaped by your experiences to date, only you can say. As for what your view of Remembrance Day may become, who can predict? I hope that, for you as for me, Remembrance Day will continue to be a time for genuine emotion and for accurate knowledge, for self-dedication to unselfish causes, and for sincere and humble faith.

COMPLIMENTS OF DELLER'S DRUG STORE,

1740 JANE STREET

WESTON CH-1-6561

VALEDICTORY

Mr. Christie, Honoured Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen:

When you think of what the word "Valedictory" means--a bidding farewell--you can realize what a delicate task I have here tonight. It is here that we, the graduating class of 1964, must finally say goodbye to the school that has nurtured our ambitions, sympathized with our problems, and supervised our mental growing pains during the past five years. And it is here that we must bid farewell to teachers and staff who have made this institution that we saw in the first weeks of grade nine as an impersonal scholar assemblyline, a beloved alma mater.

This is also a time of thinking back and of gathering together the wisdom gained in these past five years at Weston and of evaluating it in the light of the future we now face.

I can think of one thing we have all gained since the days of grade nine. In varying ways and inevitably we have all acquired some degree of maturity. Our psychology professors tell us that there are two important criteria of maturity--the way we look at ourselves and the way we look at others.

If, during our high school days, we have learned to look at ourselves realistically, to recognize our limitations and our shortcomings and our faults without overlooking our assets and our values and our strong points, then we have gained something of psychological maturity.

If we have learned to stand back and laugh at ourselves a little and be amused at our "faux pas" and not hate ourselves for them, then high school had done its job in preparing us for a fruitful, significant life.

At the same time if we can look realistically at others with all their failings and not reject them as human beings, if we can appreciate those we love for their lovable qualities and not be disappointed that they are not perfect, then we have gained something of the wisdom of the ages and something that will provide us with much happiness in the years to come.

Yes, in varying degrees we can all thank Weston for guiding us along some distance on the road to maturity.

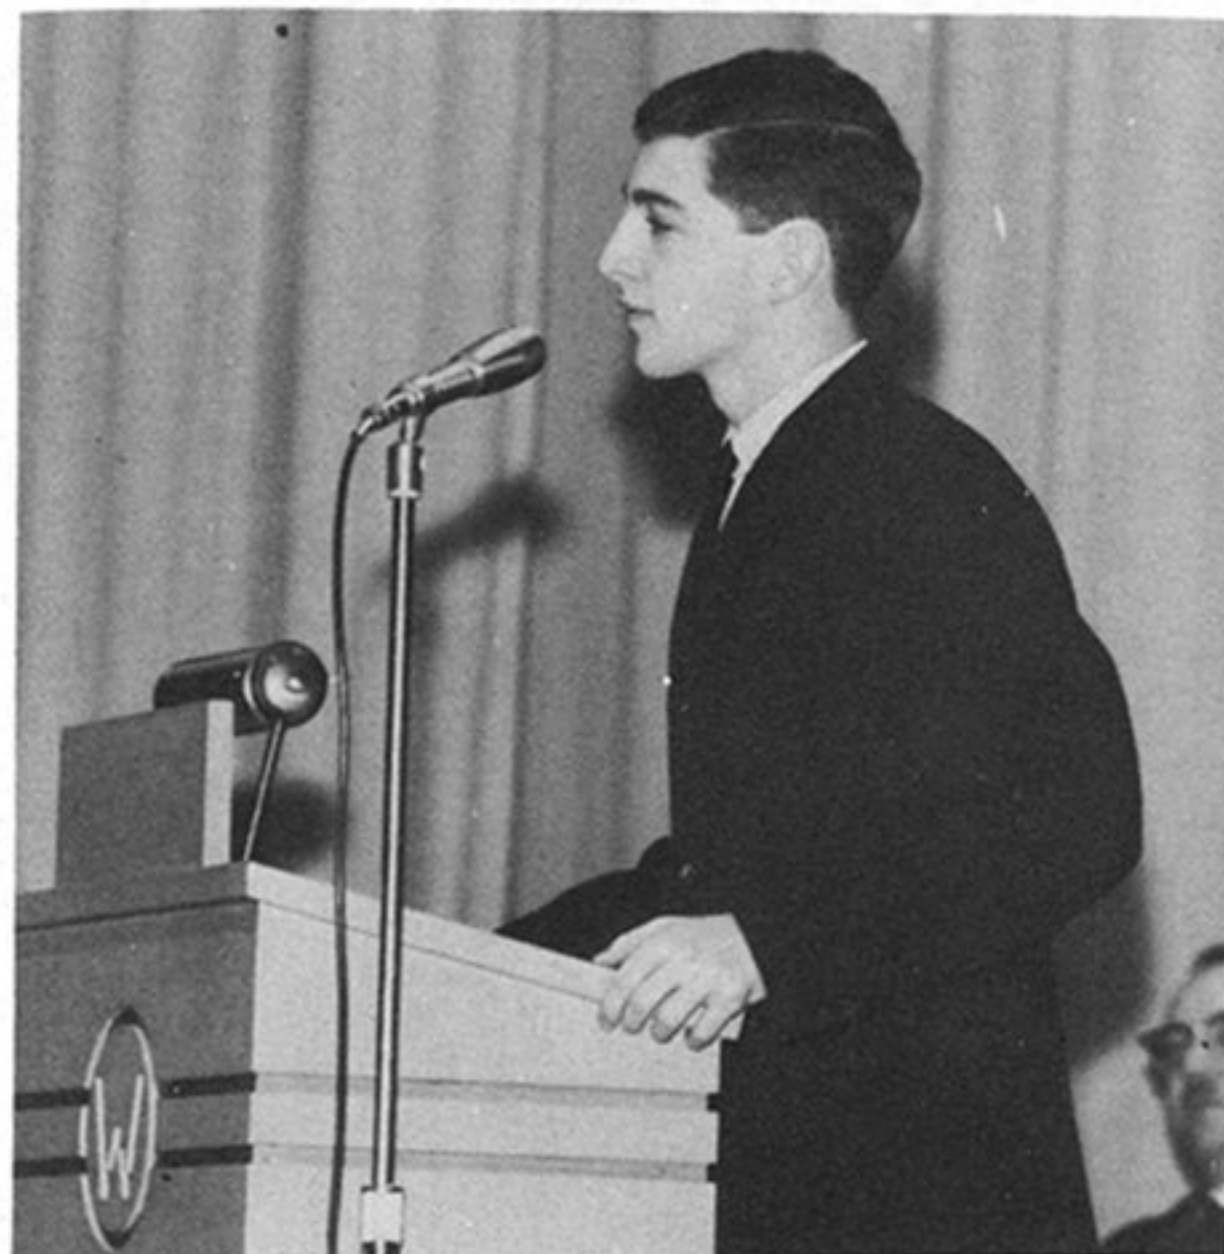

As I think about it, there is something else quite as important that we have gained--something that we have learned, above and beyond our courses--but I can't quite put a word to it.

At Weston each of us has been given, to a certain extent, responsibility and freedom--and, therefore, individuality. Each of us has been encouraged to set for himself meaningful goals. These qualities were developed in us during the years until last June we faced the final test that would tell how thorough our education at Weston had been. As you probably know, Weston came through that test with admirable colours, for each of us who wrote the Grade 13 exams here last June had set the goal of success ahead of him. Each of us, individually, worked toward that prize.

However, and this is my point, each of us, in trying those exams risked disappointment and failure. The greater our effort, in fact, the greater the risk because the greater our disappointment would have been had we failed. We went all out for success in those exams--we risked losing a year of our academic lives--but we took the risk for the sake of the goal.

We could have been satisfied with a lesser education--but we saw the possibilities and we risked failure to prove ourselves. And so progress comes. I am convinced that it is going to be like this all through life.

Take for instance the vital matter of boy-girl relationships. If a boy asks a girl for a date he risks getting a rebuff, but if he never takes the risk, well.....

Take marriage. A couple has to go steady for a while to see if marriage is what they want. But if, at some time, one of them decides that this is not for them, there is usually heartbreak and disillusionment and disappointment. Of course, if we don't take a chance--if we don't risk getting hurt--we just sit right here.

I think our years at Weston have taught us to go all out for a goal--to risk failure, to face hurt, perhaps even someday to risk our lives themselves in order to live significantly and purposefully.

We are now stepping out into a world faced with serious unsolved problems. These problems are not going to be solved by security seekers. Solutions will be found by a brave few who are willing to take a risk--men like John F Kennedy and Nikita Khrushchev who have so recently paid dearly for their risks.

We think of the population explosion, the conflicting ideologies of our time, the colour bar and even the flag debate.

We don't know the answers, but I believe that they can be found by those of my generation--if we will risk the effort.

It is tonight that we look back and we thank Weston Collegiate for developing in us this philosophy.

We have here tonight members of the Weston Board of Education. To you, my colleagues and I wish to say thank you for your continuous effort to keep the standards high at Weston. To our teachers who have become friends, we can only say that many of you will never be forgotten and will remain a part of our lives as you have given of yourselves in your teaching.

And now, finally, we must realize that this is probably the last time that we will see each other assembled together as a group. It's been a great class. We have all made friendships here that will continue throughout the years. I hope that most of us will stay in Canada, and I won't be a bit surprised if someday I am looking through the Globe and Mail and I see a picture of a Nobel prize winner and can excitedly exclaim, "Why I knew him. I went to Weston Collegiate with him!"

UNITED NATIONS

This summer I participated in the Odd Fellows' and Rebekahs' fifteenth Annual "United Nations Pilgrimage for Youth". Our journey took us to numerous places, the most popular ones being Ottawa, New York and Washington.

In Ottawa we appeared on an afternoon TV show after which we toured the Parliament Buildings where we saw the House of Commons in session. After talking with several members of it Ottawa really became the national capital to us.

From the top of the Empire State Building we saw New York City where we were to spend the next week. While there we saw International House, Radio City Music Hall, Palisade Park, Yankee Stadium, Harlem, the Statue of Liberty and of course the United Nations.

The UN became the setting for the majority of our New York activities. We heard lectures on WHO, Economic advancement, the present issues confronting the UN, UNICEF, and a very interesting and humorous view from an interpreter. When we left there we realized the importance of the UN.

Washington will always be remembered. After attending church services in Washington Cathedral we saw the White House, Thomas Jefferson Memorial, the Smithsonian Institute, the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, the F.B.I., and Arlington Cemetery where our group placed a wreath on President Kennedy's grave. At the end of the day we climbed Washington's Memorial. Our visit ended with a tour of the Canadian Embassy.

We all returned home after the trip to our various provinces and states with one common belief, the belief that through the UN world peace will be achieved.

Barbara Thomas 12A

This summer I attended a UN sponsored Student Seminar at Geneva Park. The topic for discussion was "World Race Relations." Earl Berger, a journalist launched us off by giving a general discussion. We later heard two sides to the Apartheid policy of South Africa, which were presented by a Southern African Information Attaché and an African Student. The negro problem in the U.S.A. was brought to our attention by the editor of the "Citizen", the journal of the (White) Citizen Councils in the South. A tape of an address given by John Howard Griffin, author of Black Like Me, stunned us for we then realized the plight of the Negro. Two French-Canadians, Massue Belleau of "Le Magazine Macleans" and Pierre Bourgault, President of the R.I.N. (a separatist organization) spoke of the Quebec problem. M. Bourgault was a very effective speaker, so much so that two Quebec students became staunch separatists.

The Seminar also had its more pleasant side. Time was allotted for swimming, playing tennis, basketball or cards. Every evening the Camp Council planned a programme. We had camp-fire hootenannies, a dance, and several satirical reviews.

The Seminar brought home how delicate race problems are, and how dangerous they might become, if we do not solve them.

FRIDAY FORUM

The Friday Forum is a club for those who relish the opportunity to learn. To promote research beyond the established curriculum, to stimulate logical thinking and to inspire intelligent discussion are its aims. Philosophy, politics, the liberal arts-any one of these topics provides countless topics for discussion. Individuality, free speech (and sometimes, heated controversy) are fairly exercised by those who attend. Occasionally, for topics such as "Capital punishment", the discussion takes the form of an informal debate.

The club tries to have at least one outing each year. Last winter we took advantage of the exhibition, "Picasso and Man" at the Toronto Art Gallery. This year the club intends to see the modern drama "The Deputy".

I have had the pleasure of partaking of Friday Forum's activities throughout its three-year history. I hope the club will have a long and successful future in W.C.V.S. in the years to come.

LIBRARY CLUB

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB

The W.C.V.S. amateur radio club, after being out of operation for several years has been reorganized and given the call VE3WCV. The radio club welcomes anyone who is interested or curious. The club teaches enough code, theory and regulations to allow a person to get his amateur license.

This hobby is enjoyed by over 300,000 people around the world. The thrill of your first contact with someone from another country or continent is something you will never forget.

Amateur radio covers a vast area of pleasure as well as emergency from the Alaska disaster to the radiograms of greeting or information which are sent out at no cost to any place in North and South America.

Although this is our first year we hope that the radio club will continue to operate for many years.

BLUE AND WHITE WEEK

YEA! WESTON!
FIGHT! FIGHT! FIGHT!

Every hour during Blue and White week there was some activity going on. The first coke dance was held and it was a twisting success. Those who wore our school colours were admitted free. Students and teachers attended the Pep Rally on Wednesday, and school cheers echoed in the school halls and at all our football games. What is a week of school spirit if we don't have representatives? The student body voted for Gary Canning and Kathie Moore as Mr. and Miss School Spirit. On Friday night the Blue and White Dance was held. It was a very pleasant way to terminate a memorable school week such as this.

CADETS

UNITED APPEAL

The students of Weston were able to collect $2,297.00 during their annual United Appeal Drive. This year we raised the money in a variety of projects which included car washes, Beatle movies, personal donations and bottle drives. Special mention should go to the Grade 13's who produced the annual Revue and Dance. Warm thanks are extended to all who helped to make this year's campaign the most prosperous yet.

Joan Kent 12A

CHRISTMAS BASKETS

The students of W.C.V.S. assisted by the Weston Lions Club made Christmas '64 much happier for 21 needy families in the Weston Area. The drive got off to a slow start but by the last day of school before the Christmas holidays the tables and Santa Claus sled in the foyer were flowing over with food and used toys donated by the students. The C12 students repaired and wrapped the many toys. A ham, cake, and vegetables were supplied for the baskets by the Lions Club. Students and members of the staff delivered two hampers of food and 2 or 3 gifts per child to each of the families. Santa's helpers set out for the Thistle town Hospital and Weston Sanatorium to distribute gifts among the children there.

Christmas Dance
Our Snow Queen, Bev Meikle, being crowned by Mr. Rogers.

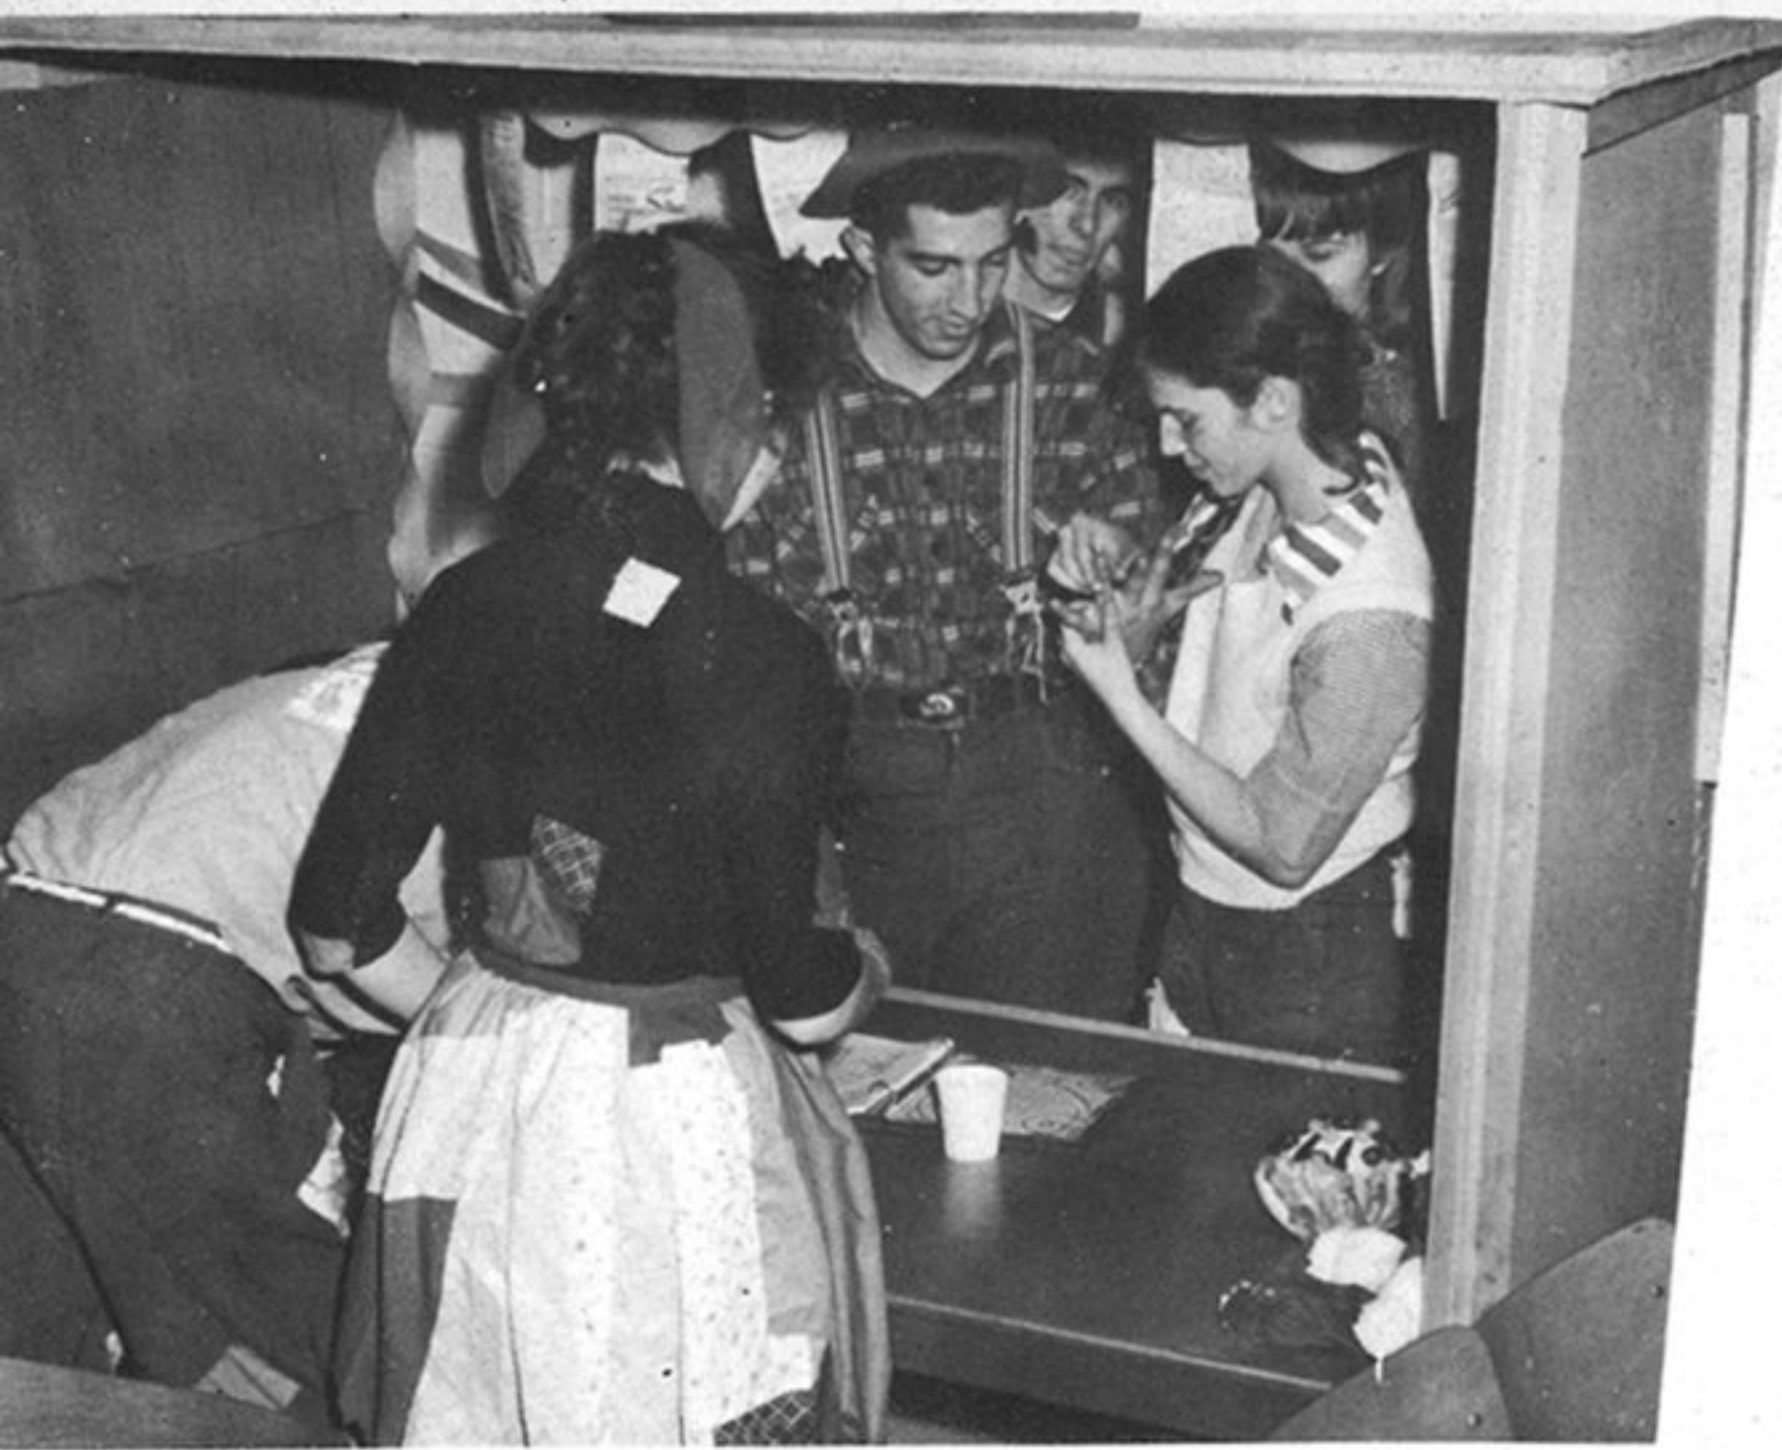

SADIE HAWKINS

Blue jeans, pig tails and apple cider set the theme for our Sadie Hawkins Dance, January 15. The Phaetans provided a lively beat for one of the greatest and most crowded dances of the school year. Later in the evening everyone sprawled on the floor for a rousing hootenanny led by Myron Lasko. Naturally Sam and Sadie were available to hitch up any marriage-minded hillbillies. I'm sure Dogpatch couldn't have held a better wing-ding for their fun-loving gang than we did at W. C. V. S.

THAT WONDERFUL YEAR

W.C.V.S. PROM

This year Weston's Annual Prom was extra special as it took place at Toronto's famous "Casa Loma." On February 5, students, staff and Board of Education members all participated in this gala event. Dancing began at 8:30 to the music of Billy Williams and his band. At 11:00 P.M. during intermission our new Queen, Brenda Kirkpatrick and Princess, Sharon Bruce were crowned. The runners-up for Queen were: Marilyn Norman and Louise Gale, for Princess, Louise Beattie and Donna Dalrymple. This wonderful evening finally came to a close at 12:30 A.M. and all the young couples left the castle having thoroughly enjoyed another of Weston's Proms.

WHITHER FRIEND?

If you accept that the liberal arts of a given period in history reflected the main thoughts and general trends of that period, I would ask you of today's art, "Whither, friend?"

Take painting and sculpture for example, since they are the easiest of the arts to understand. We have all seen a few of Pablo Picasso's fantastic creations--some of them so wierd and grotesque that they have wrought dismay, even disgust, in the most broad-minded connoisseurs. A distorted face; a ghoulish apparition; a turbulent conglomeration of shapes and colours; all these features seem to contradict the traditional harmony and beauty that used to characterize art and was the objective of the aspiring artist.

Yet, the avant-garde today seem to take pains to create the absurd. The "Theatre of the Absurd", whose popularity is rapidly increasing, is best exemplified in the plays of its founders, Samuel Beckett and Eugene Ionesco. Here is an excerpt from the latter's "The Bald Soprano".

MR. MARTIN: One doesn't polish spectacles with black wax.

MRS. SMITH: Yes, but with money one can buy anything.

MR. MARTIN: I'd rather kill a rabbit than sing in the garden.

MR. SMITH: Cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos, cockatoos.

Confusion? Certainly, the thread of coherence is hardly discernible. Here, I think, the dramatist is trying to create an atmosphere--which he maintains throughout the play.

Modern symphonic music has also adopted this uncomfortable bent. Igor Stravinsky delighted and shocked his audiences alike during the Twenties. Today he is well accepted; but music since the last war has been racing for the irrational. If you have ever heard an orchestra tuning up just before the concert begins, you have heard much of what our contemporary composers label "modern music".

No, I do not want to condemn this once-steady, now accelerating movement towards . . . towards what, I wonder?

Perhaps you may ascribe the cause of this change in man's outlook on the arts and aesthetics to his ever-widening scope in the Sciences. Five or six centuries ago, man was fast becoming a titan of his "universe". His was the likeness of God, and around his domain the heavens revolved. Then Copernicus and Galileo showed that man was but a dwarf, an impish being on a lump of interstellar matter in an endless void.

Since then the known universe has increased in its dimensions (idiomatically and literally speaking, it seems). Today, man is said to have evolved from the beast. And matter is becoming more and more infinitely divisible in the universe of the atom. The psychologists tell us that we are largely the product of our subconscious mind. These and other discoveries have put man under a humiliating emotional strain. The answers to his most basic questions seem to be more shrouded in mystery than ever.

He has given vent to his dismay in the liberal arts. Hence the gloom, the violence, the discord, the agony, the pessimism of modern art. Hence the "antiplays", the prose-poems, the music closely resembling noise.

But on the result of these alarming and exciting trends I cannot hypothesise. I think that man should re-assess his existence on earth. We should strive to effect peace and goodwill among men and rise to self-perfection, so that we may remark, without conceit: "What a piece of work is man!"

How, friend?

THE BLACK MAN

He walks tall.
No show of stoop or suffering.
And yet,
He both suffers and stoops.
The heart is crippled and confined,
the brain cramped,
the broken soul, the meekness and inferiority,
Like a spreading inkspot on his blotter outlook.
His depth, bottomless and often incomprehensive.
An outward, smiling presentation.
An inward, buried hatred.
Something fierce, strong,
A long-buried hatred, plowed again
by the dulling blade of habit.
Often unconscience.
But transferred, conceived, re-born in a new light.
The Cure? The End?
Easily summed - Total Acceptance.

FACTS

Laws of matter, the wisdom of rule
Are not idle facts to blur and fade.
They are coals to fire what God hath laid
In minds of men: the great, the wise, the fool.
This vesture of earth and sod at the start
Of Eden's growth perceived its being by Reason of thought alone. Fact does not lie
In heavy books; it is on earth in deeds, in hearts.
We oft' forget our purpose here --
To bring, to live the word of God to life's
Slow end. If all God's lessons we do here,
The one of learning, with facts to light
Our course of life within the years shall wear
The cloth of wisdom, the love of God in Christ.

KEEPING WATCH OVER

A pine tree stood as a sentinel at the foot of the hill. It guarded one who slept, undisturbed, in the cabin. The crest of the hill was blanketed in fog which hid the shack from the view of the casual passer-by. But to one as curious as I, the cabin was visible; revealed at first by a tell-tale puff of smoke from the stone chimney. When I came closer it appeared as though perched on the front stair. He, too, was keeping watch. The glass in the door was broken; weeds grew between the rotten boards of the porch. The windows were covered in cobwebs. I looked in. Then I discovered what it was that the pine tree and chipmunk guarded, and the fog protected.

A young woman dressed in black, ragged clothing sat in a dark corner on a crudely made stool. Her eyes were red with crying, but I could tell that when she was gay they would be a clear and sparkling blue. A few blonde curls had escaped the shawl which concealed the rest of her golden tresses. Her face was white, but this deathly paleness only added to the purity of her countenance. Slender hands were folded as if, desperately, she clutched something in them, and could not let it go. She, too, kept watch.

There, on a musty mattress, covered with a moth-eaten blanket, lay a child of about three years of age. It was he who slept; or was it sleep that closed those eyes with the long fair lashes? His hair fell on the pillow that supported his head. Blonde curls, golden, beautiful, reflected the light from the small fire at the other end of the room. A mouth, so perfectly formed as to make me believe it was painted by a God of Art or Beauty, held a smile, faint, but lovely. Chubby fingers grasped a little toy soldier, who stayed by his commander as he lay so still. The child was guarded by all;—his soldier, his mother, the chipmunk, the fog, and the stately pine tree that waved a farewell as it cried.

POETRY

THE LAST REFUGE

When every sacred virtue's gone;
When everything's been said and done;
When hell and hatred burn within
A soul destroyed by vice and sin;
When greed and hate and jealousy
Make every man an enemy;
When feelings make a target for
Despair and grief and many more;
When pain and woe have run amok
In this mad race to beat the clock;
When God and honesty and love
Have poured no blessings from above;
When health and wife and happiness
Have fled this wretched mess;
When need and want for love and life
Have vanished in a world of strife;
What's left when man no more can cope?
What's left? What else could be, but hope!

Evelyn Kolish 10A

THE TRAITOR

The damning whispers ceased, the hall grew silent, every eye was centred on the tall slender figure who stalked across the hall. Dark amber eyes flicked to the upturned faces. Disgust and hatred lurked in every eye. Turning, he strode to the staircase, feeling the accusing stares sear him like white-hot lance-points.

Every evening for a month he had run this gauntlet of scorn. To-night even nature seemed to be against him. The fog crept into every corner of the tower, as inescapable as death. Damp chill walls reflected the forlorn malevolence of the fog. A thousand guilty thoughts rioted through his conscience, playing havoc with his peace of mind. Again, as on recent nights his fingers reached for the jug of wine beside the square four-poster bed. His mind cried out frantically for release from the tendrils of fear that crept from some dark corner of his brain. He gulped the heady wine, seeking peace. This time no drunken shroud of peace descended over his mind. The hot coursing of alcohol along his veins did not suspend him in a limbo all his own. Tonight it cleared his mind and gave him the courage to do what he had long since known he must. His stride was firm, his hands were steady, and he paused as he reached the battlements only to stare for a minute into the swirling fog, before he continued on. A dull gray flash of steel within the fog and a dark blanket of peace descended over his tortured mind.

They said afterwards that it was an accident, that he had tripped and fallen on his dagger. They said no traitor would have killed himself when his treachery had been so profitable. That does not, however, explain the smile upon his inanimate lips or the serenity of his amber eyes that even death could not glaze.

SURF KING

The young Hawaiian donned his clothes;
He grabbed his board and wax;
He drove out to the "Pipeline";
His radio told the facts.

He'd often heard, "The pipe is up",
But never once this high;
The thought of giant "heavies",
Brought a sparkle to his eyes.

He met the gang upon the beach,
And there he caught his breath;
The jagged coral and pounding surf,
Meant "wipeout" could bring death.

They paddled "outside" to the rise,
He always led the pack;
They waited for the biggest set,
And made their first attack.

The boards set out along the weave,
Yet he held back his own;
A fatal thought had come to him,
He'd ride it in alone.

He knew the risk involved in this,
A partner could give aid;
But he was "King" he knew it well,
His decision he had made.

He felt the wave roll under him,
And paddled with his foes;
Then as his board began to move,
Up to his feet he rose.

Upon the beach all eyes were wide,
They knew he'd set the pace,
But as he "hung ten" down the slope,
They saw him lose the face.

The savage curl engulfed the man,
His scream was heard by all;
Not one there was who didn't know,
The horror of his fall.

His body they could never find,
Tis thought the sharks claimed him.
He died the life he'd lived and loved,
On ewa's fearful rim.

A legend's heard along this coast,
Of "Surf King" who is known,
To rise from death on moonlit nights,
And tame the "pipe" alone.

WAR

From the rutted road came the sound of marching feet--nay just a disorderly tramping, now, for they were weary. One soldier's mind turned to the house he had just passed, that shattered remnant of a structure. He thought of the door, and it reminded him of a gunfighter meeting his last showdown or the felling of a mighty oak. In his mind's eye he gave it life. He could see it warmly greeting visitors and bidding sweet and scented air of summer; and of protecting all within from the cold wintry winds that sought to destroy. Now it was no more.

His feet tramped on but he felt nothing. The dust choked his breathing and stung his eyes, but still he thought about the old house.

He had noted that all had been in ruins except the clock. It was as if the building were civilization and the clock humanity. Then he remembered that the clock had been stopped. The card house christened civilization had finally collapsed and the mainspring of humanity couldn't decide whether to go backward or forward. Thus it just sat there among the rubble of its own making.

On the floor were scattered some rubble and some ashes. They were not the ashes of shells and machines, of buildings and belongings but of men and women, of children and hopes, of two decades of peace, aspirations, toil, ideas, morales and habits. This was the culmination of twenty years of stupidity, of a million years.

But behold! All is not ashes. There are some things of the old order left, somewhat mauled in spots, but nevertheless intact. These are the treasured inheritances of bygone eras, nurtured by man's character. See them spring up! They won't be buried in the ruins, for they are ruin themselves. They are the spectres that haunt each generation. Their names you ask? Why who else but hate, prejudice, oppression, envy, and all the other bends on the crooked path.

Now the soldier awoke from his day-dreaming, or did he? Maybe it was now that he fell asleep.

IN A DREAM

In a dream,
While tossing,
I dreamed a dream.

I saw a giant cyclop's eye,
And from it flowed a stream of tears;
A liquid diamond for every year
That men have felt sorrow, pain, and dread.
A flood of all the misery
Suffered through all eternity.
And I felt myself drowning in those tears;
That river of woe, and grief, and pain
Drenching my soul with the hideous stain
That I saw in a giant cyclop's eye.

And my dream was over,
I awoke in a sweat
At the thought of the tears
That I swam in yet.

YOUTH

Youth, that golden Time
Of love and life; the world
Is but a bauble to play with, to tease, to smash.
Hope soars to the heights of Heaven and happiness, then
Like Icarus, slumps to the depths of despair;
A struggle for independence and a yearning for Home.
A precious time: Youth,
Too precious to be wasted on the young.
When Time has dimmed the blazing brightness of the sun,
And twilight falls,
Softened eyes and mellowed hearts
look back
For youth is indeed a Golden Time.

THE GHOST SHIP

Fierce autumn winds were wild and cold,
The sea was white and rough.
The "Mary Anne", with sails decked out,
Was heading for the bluff.

Her white sails followed no commands,
The sheets were hanging free.
The good ship floundered helpless,
In the wild and raging sea.

And no one moved to save the ship.
There was no one to block
Her pre-determined fate of wreck,
Upon the jagged rocks.

The sound of snapping wood, was lost
Beneath the weather's roar,
As pieces of the broken hull,
Were washed upon the shore.

At dawn the ship would not be there,
No trace would e'er be found
Of ship, which many people said,
Had run, that night, aground.

The sea has many secrets, which
Along through history span,
Among them is the story of,
The good ship "Mary Anne".

HATE

Why should he think of love and talk of hope
When all he owned and protected
Was threatened by a mist of hate?
Was there no love for him in our world?
In Years that passed, it was naught
But this awning devilish hate
Caused him pain and tears
Why should he then believe in love?

In retort to this anguished cry,
A voice, the potent voice of God,
Or was it the hidden voice of love that said:
"Destroy Your Hate!"
And in the end he humbly submitted
"My God I can but try!"
And try he did. In death
He found an answer to his quest.

THE HUNT

A faerie hunt in the golden morn;
A liquid note from the hunter's horn;
Steeds of speed and beauty rare,
A proud white stag caught unaware;
Gaunt, swift hounds with eyes like coals
Baying deep, hot on their goal;
Hunters ride with alien grace,
All intent on the stag and the chase.

QUIET MOMENTS

It is a well-known fact that men strive to obtain what is not immediately available. Today, one such scarcity is "peace and quiet". In the eternal rush of modern society, the senses are continually being jarred by the rigmarole, paraphernalia and jargon of our way of life. The suicidal rush-hour traffic of suburbia; the bustling of downtown commerce; the interminable volume of noise sans cesse from radio and television; the thunder of monstrous jet aviation; yes, even the telephone poles, overhead wires and television antennas which facilitate this madness and cut the sky to shreds--wherefore all this endless, nerve-wrecking nonsense? Quiet moments in a life like ours are as oases in the deserts of time!

Ah, for the life of the cloistered monk in some faraway village in antiquity! Truly he enjoyed the fruits of nature and its beauty. For what is entirely natural is good; and the many quiet moments which nature exhibits are bliss.

But what are today's treasures? A quiet lunch. A walk in the crisp snow of winter, on a moonlight night. A trip to the country. A few minutes to oneself before retiring at night. These moments are most rewarding, most productive, and most satisfying. These quiet, quiet moments!

WHAT IS A STUDENT?

A student is a wonderful thing. He comes in assorted sizes and shapes, colours and chromatics. His eyes may be blue or grey, his hair brown or blond, his face handsome or plain. Always, however, he clutches in his burdened arm a mountain of well-read tomes as he trudges his weary way from room to room.

No one can find more places to go before 8:57 A.M. No fewer excuses when found there. No other person can have so much to do during morning announcements, yet accomplish so little. The student has more work when homework time comes and more reasons why those assignments are not done when he is caught. He can find more things to chew on and look more innocent while chewing on them than anyone else. And no one can do so little during the year and obtain such good marks (sometimes) as a student.

He can send more teachers crazy, get more detentions, drive bigger cars faster and go to more wild parties than anyone. And the student is the only one who can sooth all the chaos by so few words: "Golly, teach, I passed."

Ontario Athletic Leadership Camp

Each year high schools from all over Ontario choose one girl to represent their school at the leadership Camp on Lake Couchiching. In July 1964 I had the honour of representing our school at this camp for the purpose of learning how to lead and teach others.

Every morning 196 girls donned blue gym suits for a strenuous day of basketball, aquatics, gymnastics, and two other options. We were required to teach lessons to squad members who would then evaluate our methods. We were also given the opportunity of acquiring badges in swimming. It was not all athletics though. We had sessions in which we discussed and planned school tournaments, and the running of a student council, etc. There were many enjoyable activities such as campfires, scavenger hunts, and tabloid meets.

It was quite an experience to have been instructed by such qualified teachers. These two weeks in July made an impression on me that I will carry through the years ahead.

The sage who said: "Go West" never had to figure out how to do it on a cloverleaf intersection.

To make football more attractive, Glendale, California Junior College boys used for a tackling dummy a life-size figure made up like a glamorous movie star, wearing tights, a curly wig and long gloves.

As I waited outside a supermarket, a boy about eight in the car parked alongside ours was wildly twisting the steering wheel and uttering motorlike sounds. I watched him awhile then leaned over and said, "Hey, bud, you better stick your arm out when you go around a curve or you'll get a ticket."

He regarded me scornfully. "Look, bub," he said, "you stick your arm out of a space ship and you'll have it ripped off."
